The above-captioned investigations involve the alleged extensive mishandling of classified information by named US Army officers In furtherance of this investigation, the FBI Section requests the Army Technical Cover Support Office provide a Department of Defense (DoD) witness, who can be qualified as a business records custodian, to testify truthfully to the following.

- The the Government maintains a database that documents when Department of Defense employees were briefed into Sensitive Compartmentalized Information (SCI) compartments and Special Access Programs (SAPs);
- That a review of this database was conducted and shows that our male subject (as listed below) was granted access to various SCI compartments and Special Access Programs in 2005 and 2008, as reflected in a September 25, 2014 Letterhead Memorandum (attached);
- Additionally, the DoD witness needs to be able to answer foundational questions about the DoD's standard SCI Non-Disclosure Agreement and Secrecy Agreement such that those items can be entered into evidence.

That works fine for us. Please let me know when you nail it down. Some admin stuff which may help you.

 Location: Our office is a stand-alone facility located at 7915 Microsoft Way, Charlotte NC 28273 (704)672 6100. We are about 10 minutes from the airport. When you arrive at the guard shack, pass through and make your way to the front doors and our office

We will take care of the admin stuff first, and there will be time for you to leave during the day for any breaks/lunch (no food on premise). We do have plenty of refrigerators/microwaves which you are welcome to use. Plenty of parking.

- Lodging: There are some hotels right down the road from our office, but I'd recommend 3 areas of town for a longer stay. All of these areas put you within 15 minutes of the office. Check online for hotels in these areas;
  - a. SouthPark: There is the SouthPark Mall which has upscale shopping and dining;
  - b. Ballantyne: Plenty of food/shops and convenient to office
  - c. Downtown Charlotte: Tons of stuff to do downtown and easy ride to the office which is about 10 minutes south of the city.
- 3. Clearances: Each of you should have a TS/SCI and clearance. If not, please get with your security rep and ensure you get the needed clearance prior to arriving;
- Dress: Business casual. No jeans. The reviewing room temperature tends to fluctuate, but we keep it cool due to all of the computers;

I just left you a voicemail, but figured I would also drop you a line as I called your bb and assume you do not have access to it during the day.
As you are aware, we have been working with a number of outside agencies. One of our partners, the US Army, recently requested a number of files for review to determine if based on evidence discovered in the course of our investigation. As part of the Army's review, they sent a number of items for classification review. They recently contacted us and advised they believe some of the information they are reviewing is owned by the NSA and are requesting assistance from the NSA for classification review. We are hoping you could put us in contact with the right person to help with this review.
and his team were in Charlotte in the past to review evidence, but I am not sure if he would be the one to provide the classification review. We would like to get someone from the NSA to travel to Charlotte to review the two pieces of evidence. We do not believe it would be more than a day trip for whoever is assigned this task. Any help you can provide would be greatly appreciated.
Please feel free to give me a call to discuss further. My office line is

PAULA BROATMENI. date of birth (DOB) social security account number cellular telephone number was interviewed at the Marriott City Center, Charlotte, North Carolina. Broadwell was advised that several classified documents were found during a forensic review of her computers. During the interview, she was shown each document and asked to provide a statement as to how she obtained them. After being advised of the nature of the interview, BROADWELL provided the following information:

Broadwell identified several of the documents shown to her as being from her time in Afghanistan, but was unable to provide specifics as to how she obtained them. Several of the documents related to briefings she attended. She was unable to identify most of the classified documents she was shown. Broadwell spent several months in Afghanistan researching her book on David Petraeus. During her time there, she was given access to several briefings at the "Secret" classification level and below. Reporters were often given such access in order to provide them with situational awareness of the war. In order to receive the briefings she signed an "off the record" agreement which meant she could not write about classified information she observed. She would sometimes obtain a paper copy of briefings she attended in order to preserve as research for her book.

Broadwell is unaware of the full contents of the documents she maintains on her computer. She received CD's full of documents relating to time periods of David Petraeus' life for research purposes related to her book. She does not believe that all of the documents are still classified, only that they bear the classification markings. Some of the documents snown to her contained hand-written notes and markings, which she confirmed as her own.

Broadwell had boxes full of documents related to Petraeus' various

of which were classified as "Secret." The presentations covered events pertaining to the war in Iraq. She did not realize there were classified documents on the CD until after she returned to Charlotte. She believed the documents were no longer sensitive because they pertained to historical events. Broadwell currently has possession of the CD provided to her by Broadwell did not use any classified information in writing her book. The book was reviewed by a military public affairs office and approved for release before it was published.

Broadwell interacted with various uniformed military members while researching her book. Some of her military acquaintances provided her with large volumes of printed and digital information, which she saved for later review. "Secret" documents were sometimes included in the documents she was provided. Broadwell also received large quantities of documents from military archive units in order to use for her book research.

Broadwell believed that much of the classified information located on her computer was no longer classified, as the classified information on those documents were events that had already occurred. Additionally, she advised that several documents in her possession were "over classified" as part of operational security for military actions in Afghanistan.

Broadwell has never received classified information from Petraeus. She characterized Petraeus as very procedure oriented and security conscious. She further stated that he allowed her to see unclassified documents, such as his daily brief, but would not let her have copies of them. Further, Petraeus is unaware of what documents she received or maintained copies of and stated that he would be "very upset" with her for keeping classified documents on her personal computer.

Broadwell did not have specific arrangements with any military personnel to provide her with classified information. She did not access any classified military computers, nor did she print any classified information from any classified systems. She did not use any other persons computer accesses to obtain classified information.

Broadwell characterized her time in Afghanistan as "fast paced" and stated that she never intended to improperly receive or store classified information. Rather, she received a large volume of documents and intended to review them upon her return to the U.S.. She characterized her having classified documents on her computer as "a huge mistake for anyone to make, especially a former intel officer."

As of the time of the interview, Broadwell had not deleted any of the classified information from her laptop. She was advised not to delete any data from her computer by interviewing agents.

Broadwell saw Petraeus in Washington D.C. sometime during the week of October 22, 2012. They were both attending a gala. She saw him only briefly and did not have the opportunity to speak with him, other than to exchange a greeting.

Broadwell and Petraeus have talked candidly since each of their interviews with the FBI. They confirmed their FBI interviews to each other. Petraeus told her he "was not diluting himself anymore that everything was going to turn out ok."

| She believes that if Petraeus "Goesn't work for the greater good of the country, he'll die." She clarified that she did not think he would commit suicide. Petraeus did not disclose to her any details of his FBI interview.

Broadwell and Petraeus currently have limited communication and she is unsure of where their professional relationship currently stands.
